INTRODUCTION:

A globalized world is one in which political, economic, cultural and social events become more and more extensively and more and more deeply by events of others society. In simple terms, globalization refers to citizens and nations across the world. Globalization represents the global integration of international trade, investment, information technology (IT), and cultures. It is driven by government policies designed to open up economies domestically and internationally to boost development in poorer countries and raise standards of living for their people. However, the international free market that has been created as a result of these policies has mainly benefited multinational corporations in the Western world to the detriment of smaller businesses, cultures and common goods. Globalization is also a social, cultural, political and legal phenomenon. In social terms, globalization represents greater interconnectedness among global populations. Culturally, globalization represents the exchange of ideas and values among cultures and even a trend toward the development of a single world culture. Politically, globalization has shifted the political activities of countries to the global level through intergovernmental organizations such as the United Nations and the World Trade Organization. With regard to law,

Through globalization, corporations can gain a competitive advantage from lower operating costs and access to new raw materials and additional markets. In addition, multinational corporations can manufacture, buy and sell goods worldwide. For example, a car manufacturer based in Japan can manufacture auto parts in several different developing countries, ship the parts to another country for assembly, and then sell the finished cars to any nation.
Public policy and technology are the two main driving factors behind the current globalization boom. Over the past 20 years, governments worldwide have integrated a free market economic system through fiscal policies and trade agreements. This evolution of economic systems has increased industrialization and financial opportunities abroad. Governments now focus on removing barriers to trade and promoting international commerce.

Technology is a major contributor to globalization. Advancements in IT and the flow of information across borders have increased the awareness among populations of economic trends and investment opportunities. Technological advancement such as digitalization has simplified and accelerated the transfer of financial assets between countries.

THE GLOBALIZATION CONTROVERSY

Proponents of globalization believe that it allows developing countries to catch up to industrialized nations through increased manufacturing, diversification, economic expansion, and improvements in standards of living. China is a good example of a national economy that has benefited immensely from globalization.

Outsourcing by companies brings jobs and technology to developing countries. Trade initiatives increase cross-border trading by removing supply-side and trade-related constraints. The North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), for example, encouraged U.S. car manufacturers to relocate operations to Mexico where labour costs are lower, and many U.S. companies have outsourced call centers to India.

Globalization has advanced social justice on an international scale, and advocates of globalization report that it has drawn attention to human rights worldwide. In addition, some consider the spread of pop culture across borders to advance the exchange of ideas, art, language and music.

BEGINNING OF GLOBALIZATION IN INDIA

In 1991, Indian Government had taken a new economic reformation programme and process of globalization started in India on this time. Indian Government started some new initiative to enter the globalised system, such as welcome of foreign capital and investment, opening the Indian market for MNC, relaxation of import-export norm, reduction of exchange value of the Indian rupee, relaxation the FERA (Foreign Exchange Regulation Act).
POSITIVE IMPACT OF GLOBALIZATION

There are some positive impacts of globalization as follows:

i) Increase in volume of the world trade.
ii) Assisting the aggregation of investment capital that can fund development.
iii) Finance loans and service international debts.
iv) Lobby for free trade and the removal of barriers to trade such as tariffs.
v) Introduction and dispensing of advance technology to less-developed countries.
vi) Reduction of cost of goods by encouraging their production according to the principle of comparative advantage.
vii) Generation of employment. Increase the opportunities of job.
viii) Encouraging the training of workers.
ix) Production of new goods and expand opportunities for their purchase through the internationalization of Production.
x) Promotion of nation revenue and economic growth and facilitate modernization of the less-developed countries.
xi) Generation of income and wealth.
xii) Breaking down of national barriers and accelerating the globalization of the international economy and culture and rules that govern international commerce.

DISADVANTAGE OF GLOBALIZATION

Economic downturns in one country can affect the economies of other countries through a domino effect. For example, when Greece experienced a debt crisis in the years 2009 and 2010, the impact was felt throughout Europe. In addition, globalization may have disproportionately benefited Western corporations enhancing wealth disparity.

Free trade implies a greater risk of failure for small, private or family-owned companies competing in a global market. There is also a digital divide because not all populations have internet access. Some suggest that globalization has created a concentration of information and power in the hands of small elite, and certain groups have acquired resources and power that exceed those of any single nation posing new threats to human rights on an international scale.

Standards of living have raised overall as more third-world countries experience industrialization. However, some politicians argue that globalization is detrimental to the middle class and is causing increasing economic and political polarization in the United States. Outsourcing, where U.S. companies transfer their facilities abroad to lower labour costs and avoid negotiating with unions, means that workers in the United States must now compete internationally for jobs.

Globalization has contributed to global warming, climate change and the overuse of natural resources. An increase in the demand for goods has boosted manufacturing and industrialization. Globalization has also increased homogenization in countries. For example, international chains, such as Starbucks, Nike and The Gap, dominate commercial space in every U.S. town and many towns in other nations.

Cultural exchange has been largely one-sided because U.S. goods and culture have influenced other countries more than those of any other nation.

The information revolution and free flow of people from one state to another results in the formation of hybrid culture, which is speculated in today’s world. In a way it can be said that the indigenous culture is now superseded by foreign values culture. Sometimes such a situation is known as cultural pollution.

POLITICAL EFFECT OF GLOBALIZATION

Globalization has affected the shape of the political process in a number of ways. We can say that globalization has reduced the significance and sovereignty of the nation states. The control of the nation states over its own territory and resources are at a decline as they now face stiff competition from the world markets. The distinct demarcation between the domestic and foreign policy is getting blurred. New forms multilateral and global politics, proliferation of IGO as well as INGO are a significant contribution of the process of globalization. It has been marked by the internationalization and transnationalization of politics, the development of regional and global organizations and institutions the emergence of regional and global law a multilayered system of global governance, both formal and informal.

TECHNOLOGICAL GLOBALIZATION AND ITS EFFECT

Globalization has its effect in the field of technology as well. It has brought tremendous change in the field of transportation, communication, and technological know-how. The spread of technology has consequently resulted in the development of weapons of mass destruction as well as powerful conventional weapons. Use of mobile phone, inter-net, WhatsApp, face books are increased tremendously. Young generation is affected badly. They are isolated from their families, friends and society. They are roaming in fantasy world. They also use inter-net bad purpose. So many problems arise in their lives and society. In our country, Internet users are increasing 2010-10%, 2015-26%, 462.1 million (37) in January 2017. The number of Mobile phone users has also increased to around 73% in 2017.
